

They get in free for a reason, pal

Judge KOs club bias suit by 'men's rights' nut

BY BARBARA ROSS
and STEPHEN REX BROWN
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

ONE LAWYER'S quixotic fight for men's equality suffered yet another legal setback when a judge ruled his human rights were not violated by a Chelsea nightclub that made him buy a $350 bottle of vodka to get in.

Manhattan Supreme Court Justice Alexander Hunter wrote this week that Roy Den Hollander was not the victim of age and gender discrimination in 2010 when a bouncer at Amnesia nightclub told the skirt-chasing senior to pay up, while letting a young lady in for free at the same time.

"They all pull the same thing: 'These guys got gray hair, let's charge them some money,'" said the crusading barrister. "They're doing the same thing they did in the Deep South back in the 1950s. Having to buy a $350 bottle of watered-down vodka — that's the 'sitting in the back of the bus' for us!"

Hollander recalled that when the bouncer told him and a friend to buy the pricey bottle of vodka, he knew he was being taken for a sucker.

"There's no justice for guys in this day and age," railed Hollander.

Still, the anti-feminist attorney said the ruling did not shock him, given the previous defeats he's suffered in his lonely struggle for male liberation.

"I was ticked off, but I've come to the conclusion that whenever I go into court and I'm fighting feminist ideology or political correctness, I'm going to lose," he said. "Either I'm a stupid lawyer, or I'm stupid for thinking the court will enforce the rights of guys."

He vowed to appeal, saying the judge had not had the chance to consider his additional legal arguments involving the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment and additional discrimination charges.

But Hollander was much less forthcoming about his own vintage, only saying he was "middle-aged."

He said revealing his age would mess up his game.

"If I'm hitting on some young

Is it age and gender bias that leads clubs to let in gals like these but charge 66-year-old Roy Den Hollander (below) a mint? Judge didn't think so, either.

girl at the club — and I won't be hitting on an older one because they don't look as good — if she knows how old I am I'm not going to be able to exploit her infinite capacity to delude herself into thinking I'm younger," he said.

A search of public records revealed he's 66.

This wasn't Hollander's first longshot lawsuit.

He also sued several Manhattan hot spots, including the Copaca-bana, for organizing "ladies' nights" drink specials. The suit was thrown out by federal appeals court in 2010.

He also sued — twice — to halt federal funding of Columbia University's feminist studies program, arguing that feminism constitutes a "modern-day religion." Both actions were thrown out, most recently by the 2nd Circuit Court of Appeals last month.

Hollander said the defeats were starting to get to him.

"I'm beginning to think it's time for vigilante justice — civil disobedience," he said, elaborating that he "may pull a Carrie Nation on the ladies' nights clubs."

Carrie Nation was a radical temperance activist of the early 1900s who vandalized bars with a hatchet.

